

Attorney Matthew Pawa is a general practice litigator who has represented governments, non-profit groups, citizens and large and small businesses in a wide range of environmental, constitutional, commercial, real estate and personal injury cases, including class actions and individual cases. Pawa has represented the State of New Hampshire for a decade in a groundwater pollution case that has recovered over $100 million to date and resulted in a $236 million verdict against ExxonMobil in 2013 after a three month trial. Massachusetts Lawyers Weekly recognized Pawa in 2013 as a Massachusetts Lawyer of the Year for his work on the New Hampshire case. Pawa also has pioneered the use of tort theories against greenhouse gas polluters in cases such as Connecticut v. American Electric Power and Kivalina v. ExxonMobil. Pawa regularly argues in federal and state appellate courts and handles civil trials for a wide array of clients. He is a regular speaker at bar association events and law schools, has written a number of law review articles, has received a national award for excellence in legal writing and is frequently quoted in the press on legal topics. Pawa opened his law firm, Pawa Law Group, P.C., in 2001 with offices in Boston and Washington, D.C.
